ROGUES' GALLERY GROWS AT POLICE HEADQUARTERS

Chief McMillin's Collection of Portraits and Descriptions of Criminals Assuming Proportions of a Big City.

Fugitives from justice, murderers, safe crackers, second story men, check artists, deserters from the army, pick pockets and other criminals "mug" to the extent of several hundred appear in the rogue's gallery of the Albuquerque police station. These pictures were mailed here from the police headquarters of nearly every city in the United States of any size and importance. They were also mailed to practically every other city in the country in an effort to capture the fugitives.

The rogue's gallery of a city police station is one of the most interesting branches of the department. When these pictures are received they are shown to each patrolman, officer and detective on the force. The features of the fugitive are closely studied as is the description of his height, weight, marks, scars and etc. The fugitive school is held each morning and it is remarkable the number of criminals that are caught by the broad arm of the law by this system. At the Albuquerque police station during the past several years a number of noted criminals have been captured by the great officers through the identification cards and posters. When a murder is committed in this city or a serious crime, and the guilty man escapes, his picture is sent broadcast by the local police, for when a suspicious character is detained Chief McMillin has him "mugged" and his picture is sent to the larger cities asking if he is wanted. Often times noted criminals have been run down in this manner.

The Bertillon system of measuring and "mugging" criminals is extensively used by the larger police stations of this country. This system was founded many years ago by a Frenchman, Bertillon, after which it was named. When a criminal is captured he is measured and examined for scars, birthmarks, weighed and his peculiarities noted. The color of his hair, eyes, whether he has gold fillings or crowns and etc. He is then "mugged" and the description printed on the back of the picture. This picture and description is kept in a large cabinet by the man in charge of the Bertillon system. If he escapes the cards are sent broadcast. On office times if the man serves time and is released and commits another offense or is suspected of having committed one his past record can be found by being recognized through his Bertillon measurements and pictures. Detectives have pictures of thousands of fugitives and the crime they are wanted for. Criminals whom they meet on the street a year after having studied their Bertillon measurements are often recognized and arrested by them.

THE TWO ORPHANS

Adapted and Produced by Herbert Henretta (Theda Bara) and Louise (Jean Seithen) are the two orphans. Henrietta is vividly beautiful and Louise, while equally fair, to look upon, is blind. On the death of their parents in a French province they are sent to Paris where an uncle has promised to provide for them. On their arrival in the capital Henrietta who has attracted the eye of the rascally Marquis De Presles, is abducted by the other. Louise falls into the hands of Mother Froehard, a professional beggar. Mother Froehard has two sons, Jacques, a swaggering, handsome daredevil too proud to work, and Pierre, a hunchback, who earns an honest living as a limber. In the sequel, Henrietta and Louise are reunited and Henrietta is freed from the clutches of the Marquis. Henrietta has been taken to the morgue's chateau. Frightened by her experience and half mad with apprehension she appeals to the assembled one of whom, Charles De Vendree, rescues her after a duel with De Presles. Won by Henrietta's supposing beauty, the Marquis wishes to marry her. His father indignantly refuses his consent and causes the girl to be sentenced to prison and exile. How she escapes this fate and with her blind sister finds the way to peace and happiness makes a story of compelling charm and thrilling interest. "The Two Orphans" well deserves the term "photoplay supreme." At the Pastime Sunday and Monday.

COMMERCIAL CLUB BECOMES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Working Name of Organization Changed. Although Official Title will be Permitted to Stand.

The Albuquerque Commercial club, pioneer commercial organization of the southwest, and one of the best known organizations of its kind in the whole west, has changed its name, effective at once, according to an announcement today by President Clark M. Carr, and as per new stationery of the club, which has been printed.

From this time on the organization will be known as "The Chamber of Commerce and Commercial Club of Albuquerque," with the latter type emphasis on the "Chamber of Commerce."

The change was made by the directors to harmonize the organization with similar trade clubs all over the country and to permit of membership in the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

Officially and under its article of incorporation the club still will be the "Albuquerque Commercial Club."
